A Small-pox Romance.

Life is full of tragedies. Love, the divinest part o' existence, is not free from the blight of disease and darkness. No matter how truly and purely may beat the heart-no matter how tright may be the sunny vision of the futurethe clouds of adversity, sooner or latter are sure to come. Death, with the unsparing soythe and ghastly shroud, may sever the mu uslly beloved, or affl ction in some other form may rob life of nearly all its tenderness and beauty.

A few short weeks ago there lived in the West division, on a fashionable thoroughfare, a young and handsome couple, who had learned to love with the sweet intensity of olden ro marce. Their affection was recognized and approved by their kindred, and, very soen, their Lands were to be united as burband and wife.

The gentleman was a flue specimen of maoly beau y Tall, well porportioned, with fine features and a free stride, he was the beau ideal of a lover. The lady was all that fancy could paint her, and as good as she was lovely. She bas lived, however, to realize sadly that All that's bright must fade-

> The brightest still the fluetest. All that's sweet was made

To be lost when sweetest. The gentleman's business called him to trave occasionally, and, after returning from one of his r. cent trips, he felt particularly indisposed, and recired at once to his room in the fashionable boarding house kept by the mother of his fiancee. Fealing a growing sense of wretched ness, he looked his door, not wishing to disturb the household, and tossed feverishly on his bed until some of the domestics came to make up the apartment. Then be complained of a violent headache, sick stomach, and other ills which make a man indifferent to existence.

At first it was fondly hoped that the attack was a mere cold or intermittent fever, at worse, and he received the usual remedies. These having no effect, a skilled physician was called, and, after examining the symptoms, pronounced the osst one of small pox. This was a thun-derbolt to the patient and his friends. He could not remember how or where he had been exposed, and they were slow to believe the ful herribleness of the appoure ment.

Other physicians were called, and, as usual, disagreed. Even the health officer could not said property at private said parties desiring to make up his mind at once. From Tuesday purchase may apply to O. W. Huatt, at Fairfax until Friday the sick man remained at the boarding house in painful uncertainty. At last board ng house in painful uncertainty. At last his symptoms became so clear and alarming that the most ignorant could no longer doubt. and was ordered removed to the pest house. But although panis might extend itself to the boarders, neither his figanose nor her mother title to be retained until the whole purchase were moved by such vain fears. The young lady had been his faithful nurse while he romained beneath her parent's roof, and, when he was removed by the sanitary officers her noble tenderness and sense of dury braced her heart to the act of following him even within the putrid precincts of that abode of mor tality and disfigurement. She practically illus trated the sentiment of the beautiful song: Thou hast called me thy angel in moments of bliss, And thy angel I'll be thro' the horrors of this; Thro' the furnace unshrinking thy steps to pursue.

And shield thee, and save thee, or perish there too. Unfortunately, not even her devotion, alhough it undoubtedly saved the slender thread of life, could shield him from the worst effects of the dread disease. His case developed into the dreadful type known as "confluent," and when he arose from his couch of sickness the unfortunate lover realized the doom of desolation entailed up him. He was stricken blind, and might never more behold the light of day, or look into the depths of the sweet eyes that still beamed with love for him. In an age like this, when romantic devotion is supposed to be on the wane, and in a city like Chicago, which is, of necessity, utilitarian, it might be expected that the officion which fell upon her idol might have alienated from him the heart of his betrothed. Instances of a kind almost similar have occurred, where this has been the result, but, in this case, purity and unselfishness have triumphed. The misfor tupes of her lover have the more endeared him to his faithful lady, who is now the light of his heart and the consoler of his darkened existence. And now, while the sun of May is waking into vernal beauty park and boulevard, and while the shade trees are throwing out their unbrageous loveliness, a stalwart man, erect and stately still, although destiture of vision, and with a face scarred by that fell malady, may be seen walking slowly amid the beauties of the spring time, and by his side is a young girl. upon whom he leans for guidance and who is to him "the morning star of memory" that can not fade or faint or die until the last dread summons makes even sublime devotion vain to preserve a life that must be, without such a solace. worthless and desolate beyond expression .-Chicago Times
